Jack Madock is a graduate student with the Institute of Philosophy at KU Leuven in Leuven, Belgium. He is originally from Chicago in the United States. His current research falls within the sub-discipline of normative political philosophy. He is particularly concerned with issues surrounding migration in both the global and domestic senses. He is also interested in the ethics of climate change, global justice, and liberal toleration and multiculturalism. He works under the supervision of Prof. Dr. Helder De Schutter and within the wider Research in Political Philosophy and Ethics (RIPPLE) center at KU Leuven.