

Roberto Sensi is a policy expert at ActionAid Italy, where he coordinates the organization's work on tackling food poverty. He has authored several reports on the multidimensional measurement of the phenomenon and on policy responses, with a particular focus on approaches developed in high-income countries. His work explores the nexus between the right to food, food security, and inequalities, with the aim of promoting systemic strategies through research, analysis, advocacy, and by strengthening the role of local and national actors.