

Jacopo Sforzi is a senior researcher at Euricse. He holds a degree in Political Science (University of Florence) and a PhD in Economic Sociology (University of Brescia), with a thesis dedicated to the role of institutions and social capital in local development processes of rural areas. After working as a researcher at the School on Local Development (University of Trento) on a research project on the cooperative phenomenon and rural development in Eastern European countries, in 2010 he began his collaboration with Euricse as a post-doc researcher, with a research project on the role of cooperative banks in local development. His research interests focus mainly on local development, rural development policies and local institutions, with an emphasis on cooperatives, public-private partnerships, shared administration and the different models of community-based organizations in the management of goods and services of general interest. His latest publication: "Local Action Groups and Community-Based Enterprises: Fostering Aggregation and Local Development towards a Long-Term Vision for Rural Areas", Scienze Regionali, 11/02/2024, pp. 1-30 (with A. Spalazzi, A. de Renzis (2024)).
